Judging from the communication on the burial question brought before the Sanitary Board at its meeting on the 2nd instant, it effect, to the public health. The idea is not the neighbouring province of Kwangtung commonly sauctions this practice, and where the brown glazed pots containing the ancestral remains are common objects on the billsides. We do not imagine, therefore, that the Chinese would raise any obstacles to such a settlement of the burial question. The Europeans residents in the Western district experiences of fever have been so frequent and so recent, and its occurrence has so generally been ascribed to the great burial ground on Mount Davis, that they may perhaps be excused if they regard the proposisouppon of mistrust. tion to the Government as to the result of be in progress with the Chinese Authorities Government has sent up to Acting Captain accounts for 1889 showed a good profit, the on the question of the provision of a site for a new cometery for the Chinese population.

In connection with the dismissal eigners in the Japanese service the Japan Gazette suggests that if not a retrograde movement it will be so interpreted in many foreign countries, and that just at the present time it is all important to Japan that she should not produce an unfavourable impression in Western countries. As to this, if the Japanese are satisfied they can do without the foreigners we think they would gain little by retaining them in order to curry favour with the Western Powers or to avoid producing a bad impression. To be ruled by considerations of what people will think is soldom good policy, as illustrated by the fable of the old man and his donkey. It is rather unfortunate, we think, that at the present juncture it should have been suggested to the Japanese that it would be advisable to retain foreigners in their employ for supposed collateral advantages independent of the direct services rendered by the employes. If the Japanese were influenced by such considerations we could have little respect for their independence, and such, we think, would be the view taken by foreign Governments. The only question to be considered is whether the Japanese can safely discard the assistance of foreign employes. On this point we agree with our Yokohama contemporary when it says that those who know Japan heat are aware that the civilisation has adopted from us is characterised by extreme artificiality in many important particulars, and that one of the effects of foreigners residing and imparting instruction in the country is the deepening and rendering thorough of what has been hitherto but superficially and partially acquired. 380 The wholesale dismissal of foreigners must therefore be regarded as a grave mistake. The Japanese with their usual acuteness will doubtless discover that it is so before long, but when that time comes they will be placed at the disadvantage of having to engage new and untried men to replace the experienced and valuable officers with whom

"Miss Helen, your dear " Not, not dead ! Surely not dead !" exclaimed Helen in bitter grief, flinging herself down by the bedside. "Aunt Margaret, dear Aunt Margaret, speak to me again! "She'll speak na mair on earth, Miss Helen. she has spoilt my life?" reflected Helen, bitter. She's had a sair journey, but it's come to an ly, when her aunt had left. And her spirit grew | end. It's her heart; she knew it could not stand (To be continued.)
